The UFL Transformers Project

Extensive research, collaboration and development has been underway by the Unionlearn funded Transformers Project team since 2016. The project is led by the National Education Union and partners to support work-based learning practices in response to a shift in England towards employer-led skills development.

New evidence arising from our work suggests that conversations between employers, learning providers and employees around ‘transversal’ skills are beginning to reap rewards.

Examples are available to show how employers and learning providers have gathered customised data on transversal skills that can stimulate discussions and generate actions to enhance training and workplace productivity.

To take part in the project or for further information, please contact:

Paula Jones Senior Project Leader
paula.jones@neu.org.uk or tel: 07436 800841 or visit www.atl.org.uk/transformers

‘The Transformers Project’ is a free initiative helping employers and learning providers enhance training and workplace skills.

We are an all-embracing national partnership funded directly by Government through the Union Learning Fund and the National Education Union. Our partners contribute their status, knowledge and skills in support of the Project. Our ambition is to advance the status and recognise those people who support and develop others in the workplace to advance our economy and improve working lives.